A CHRISTMAS GIFT FROM ME TO YOU

The only Christmas list you need this year.

I want to build a Christmas wish list page for my kids that I can share with my family as a link. First, interview me. Ask one question at a time, starting with my first name and my kids' first names and ages. Then, for each kid, ask about clothing and shoe sizes, what they're into right now, anything to skip, and gift ideas (links welcome). If I say “not sure,” just move on. When you have enough, build the page and show it to me as a finished page I can open, not code. Each kid gets a tab with their name and age, sizes, what they're into, and a “please skip” line, then their wish list. Every gift is labeled Open (up for grabs), Claimed (someone's buying it, show who), or Covered (already bought, crossed out). Open gifts first. At the top: “Want to grab something? Text me so nobody doubles up.” (use my first name). Add a “Last updated” date and a small footer: “Made with Claude · a Christmas gift from Moms Who Claude.” No prices anywhere. First names only. Big, easy-to-read text, because grandparents will open it on their phones. Look: a deep berry-plum background with soft snow dots, one warm cream card, dark plum text, one rose accent color. Headlines in a serif font like Newsreader, everything else in Montserrat. A holly sprig and a string of ornaments. No gold, no glitter. When it's built, tell me in plain steps, for both my phone and my computer, how to publish it as a link, how to bookmark that link, and how to text it to my family. I'm the only one who will change this page. Tell me whether the link stays the same when I update it.
